YOUTH FATALLY
INJURED IN CRASH

Ralph Hull, 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Hull, of Willets street, was fatally injured on Wednesday of last week when the bicycle on which he was riding collided with a San Francisco Municipal bus at the Lakeside Golf Club.

Hull was riding on the handle bars of Ulysses Cashion's bicycle and was flung to the road. As the result of his fall from his perch on the handle bars Ralph suffered a skull fracture and passed away in the Park emergency hospital, where he was taken with Ulysses Cashion, 16, of Westlake avenue, who suffered a broken arm and a broken leg.

Young Hull's remains were removed to Suhr & Wieboldt's, at 1465 Valencia street, pending funeral arrangements.

DALY CITY WOMAN'S
DEATH IS PROBED

Mrs. Lillian Turner, who underwent a major operation at a San Mateo hospital a month ago, died at her home on San Diego avenue, Wednesday, June 28. An investigation is under way and it is reported that Mrs. Turner had not been under the care of a physician since returning to her home two weeks previous to her death.

Mrs. Turner leaves a son, Harry Turner, 18, to mourn her untimely passing. Services were held from the mortuary chapel of W. C. Lasswell & Co. last Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment was in Woodlawn Memorial Park.

Merchants Are Preparing For Their Annual Picnic

The Daly City Merchants' Association held its regular monthly meeting last Wednesday evening at the City Hall auditorium, and the chief interest of the meeting centered on the preparations for the forthcoming annual picnic at Oak Cove Park, on August 13. Arrangements are being made to have the Eagles' band lead the caravan and play at the picnic grounds. This has always been a feature and is much appreciated by all who love band music.

This will be a basket picnic, where every one is expected to bring a well filled basket for themselves and friends, but in addition to this there will be plenty of coffee, rolls, hot dogs, etc., furnished free. There will be the usual races and athletic exercises and games. Arrangements are being made for an unusually large crowd, as this is considered Daly City's own outing, where the general public is invited and always welcome. The good people of Daly City are requested to reserve this day, August 13, as one day on which to forget their troubles and enjoy themselves.

Members of the City Council present announced that a new city ordinance will soon be promulgated whereby the licenses of business in Daly City will be regulated, and in some cases reduced. It has long been a cause of complaint that business and professional men in Daly City were required to pay a license for doing business, while people in San Francisco in the same line of business, or in the same profession, could come here and compete without paying any license at all. It is to be hoped that this proposed new ordinance will have the effect to remedy this difficulty.

Mayor H. H. Smith reported that it may be that the money appropriated by the Federal government can be obtained and used for the widening of Mission street and San Jose avenue, in which case there would be no assessment of property on Mission street, and the work would proceed as soon as the money could be made available.

The members of the Merchants' Association are requested to be present in large numbers at the next regular meeting, to be held Wednesday, August 2, so that the final arrangements for various committees for the picnic can be made.

W. H. CLAY, Recording Secretary.

NEW HEALTH BOARD SELECTED

The San Mateo county supervisors last Monday named the board of health set up in the county's new charter, which is now in operation. The board selected consists of Mrs. Harry Dana, Hillsborough society woman; Mrs. Pansy Jewett Abbott, superintendent of schools; A. W. Deul, sanitary engineer, and Drs. Harper Peddicord and E. W. Cleary. The supervisors also appointed a County Recreational Board consisting of E. P. Wilsey, E. A. Rollison, Herbert Harris, Alvin Hatch and Felix Bortes.

LEGION OFFICERS ARE NOMINATED

At the regular meeting of Daly City Post No. 410, American Legion, the following nominations of officers for the coming year were made: For Commander, Comrades Cornell and Prizborowski; First Vice-Commander, Comrades Hill and Shaw; Second Vice-Commander, Comrades Saligari and Matzek; Chaplain, Comrade Cantor; Finance Officer, Comrade Foreman; Executive Board, Comrades Callen, Allen, Vance, Cody and Sakalasis; Sergeant-at-Arms, Comrade Stubbles; Service Officer, Comrade Allen; Delegate to County Council, Comrade Crane.

The delegates to the Department Convention at Pasadena, August 14, 15 and 16, will be nominated and elected at a later date.

Don't miss the next regular meeting, July 12. Final nominations and election of officers will be held at this meeting.

The San Mateo County Council will meet in Burlingame at the American Legion hall, tonight, July 7.

The national executive committee of the American Legion recently approved the formation of 10,700 Posts of the American Legion of "Squadron" units of male descendants of veterans. This Junior organization will be known as "Sons of the American Legion." Sons, step-sons, and adopted sons of veterans, men or women, with honorable discharge from one of the armed forces of the United States in the World war will be eligible.

An official announcement of the ideals and purposes of the new organization follows in part:

In keeping with the ideals of the American Legion to promote and transmit to posterity those principles of patriotism which characterized our services in the World war, and which have inspired our organization since then, it has been conceived that an effective way to accomplish this purpose would be to take our sons along with us in this movement. For some years members of the Legion have felt that our sons have a definite place in Legion work.

Every boy whose father was in the service is proud of that fact. In his own individual way among his fellows he seeks recognition of the honor that he is the son of a man with an honorable war record. His heart and soul seek to copy his fathers' patriotism. Here is a plan to mold the boy's future around this splendid ideal.

The preamble to the constitution of the Sons of the American Legion states: "Proud possessors of a priceless heritage, we, sons of veterans of the World war, do associate ourselves together as Sons of the American Legion for the following purposes," then follows the preamble similar to the American Legion.

The constitution states that the Sons of the American Legion is a civilian organization. Membership does not effect or increase liability for military or police reserve. It shall be absolutely non-political, and shall not be used for the dissemination of partisan principles, nor the promotion of the candidacy of any person seeking public office or preferment. No candidates for or incumbents of a remunerative public office shall hold any office in the Sons of the American Legion in any department or local organization thereof.

It shall be absolutely non-sectarian. Each member shall perform his full duty as a citizen according to his own conscience and understanding. California Legionnaire, L. M. H.

Former Daly City Resident
Answers Final Summons

Mrs. H. Wallace, formerly of 183 Los Olivos avenue, the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Silvanes, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. A. Santos, of 21 Wool street, San Francisco, on June 27. Mrs. Wallace is survived by her daughters, Mrs. A. Santos, and Mrs. C. Jordan, of Redwood City. She was the beloved grandmother of Mrs. J. C. Shaves and Andrew and Peter Silvanes, Margaret and Eugene Jordan, and Mrs. Razio, and also leaves six great-grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by Valente, Marini, Perata Co., at the home of her daughter on Wool street, and she was laid at rest in the Holy Cross cemetery.

FACE INCREASE IN TAX RATE

County Auditor Edward Stack told the San Mateo county supervisors last Monday that the county faces an 18 per cent increase in the tax rate because of the fact that the new charter provides for $40,000 more in officials' salaries than was paid in the last fiscal year, and because of the necessity for a $50,000 appropriation for unemployment relief.

TANFORAN UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

John W. Marchbank has agreed to turn over the Tanforan race course to the California Blood Horse Association. Both the financing and the administration of the fall meeting at Tanforan and of future meetings will be under the control of the new association. The change is in accordance with plans long ago formulated by Mr. Marchbank and is brought to its culmination by the coming of the pari-mutuel system of wagering on races.

The Association, which takes over the plant in San Mateo county, has a membership of fifty sportsmen living in various sections of the state, and will function somewhat similarly to organizations in Europe. Its primary object will be the encouragement of the breeding of thoroughbreds and the maintenance of racing on the highest plane.

Mr. Marchbank is giving his heartiest support to the sportsmen's organization and has expressed the opinion that it is ONLY under such a turf association that the great pastime will ever reach the importance it deserves in California.

No thought of self aggrandisement on the part of any of the originators enters into the launching of the movement.

In the event of a vacancy in the membership of the new organization it will be filled by the election of a blood relation of the late member or by the choice of a member by the unanimous vote of the Club. It is the intention of the sponsors of the sportsmen's association never to extend the membership role beyond fifty.

Nearly all of the members of the Association are breeders of the blood horses at present, owning nurseries either in Central or Southern California. Other members are looking about for suitable stallions and brood mares and are already in touch with the Whitneys and other famous breeders as to acquiring breeding stock.

An idea to be carried out as soon as possible is the establishment of a breeding bureau, similar to the breeding bureau of the Jockey Club in the state of New York. This bureau will work in conjunction with the re-mount service of the United States Army for the production of a sturdy type of light horses useful for riding on the trails of the parks of large cities, in polo, on the farm, and if need be for cavalry re-mounts.

Members are talking of presenting stallions of the proper bone and substance to the breeding bureau in order that farmers and ranch men have the services of the thoroughbred for early mating with cold blooded mares of good conformation.

With the yearling sales at Saratoga only a few weeks away, sportsmen of the new group will either make the trip themselves to the sales headquarters or send agents to pick up colts and fillies that are likely to become as well known in the racing game in the West as such performers as the western Emperor of Norfolk, Africander, Tradition, Briar Sweet, Peter the Great and others were noted in the East. The meeting of Western and Eastern breeds will renew the old time good natured rivalry that brings the pure spirit of sport to racing.

HOME TEAM LOSES
THRILLING GAME

The Daly City Eagles' baseball team went down to defeat last Sunday, 3 to 0, in their contest with their brothers of Aerie No. 5 of San Francisco. The contest was witnessed by a good sized crowd and it was a pitching duel between Moran of No. 5 and Sam Howley of our local Aerie. Had the little giant received the same gilt edged support that his opponent received, the game would probably still be going on. However, both pitchers twirled sensational ball, and our visiting brothers showed the fans a fast ball team, Jordanoff at short and Casino i ncenter-field making sensational plays. Hoffman, on third, also turned in a great game. For our local boys, Hawley's pitching and Pierotti's hitting featured.

A return game will be played within the next few weeks, and it should be a thriller.

There will be no game next Sunday for the Eagles, as they will have a big picnic at Valemor Park on that day.

LOCAL COUPLE WED

Miss Katherine Loomis, popular daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Loomis, of Peoria street, became the bride of Alexander Cameron, of Westlake avenue on Saturday, June 24, at an impressive ceremony performed by Father Donohue.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents before an altar of white stocks and white lilies at 7 o'clock.

The bride had as her attendants her two cousins, Miss Evelyn Lowden and Miss Louise Lahey. Miss Lowden was maid of honor and wore a pink satin gown and carried a bouquet of pink roses and blue delphinium. Miss Louise Lahey was the bridesmaid and she wore a gown of blue satin and carried a bouquet of pink roses and blue delphinium.

The bride wore a fashionable white gown and veil and carried a shower bouquet of bridal gladiolas and lilies of the valley.

The groom was attended by William Hutchings.

The wedding was followed by a reception in the bride's home, to which relatives and close friends of the happy couple had been invited.

Mr. and Mrs. Cameron left on a honeymoon trip to be spent in Sacramento. Upon their return they will reside on Vista avenue.

ALL EXPERTS SAY
GOLD TO BENEFIT

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

With the opening of a new fiscal year it is well to take stock and form at least an indefinite notion of what the future holds for us. Which ever way the cat jumps, as the homely expression has it, either in continuation of managed currency or a return to the gold standard, we can confidently predict good times ahead for the miner. Capital is especially attracted to the placer fields of California and great things are in store for the man going out in search of Mother Nature's hidden treasure. British Columbia is also going strong, much to our satisfaction.

As Robert E. Sherwood recently said:

"We stare, with tired eyes, at current head lines," but there must be a way out and activity, even superactivity, in our mines is going to help materially in groping through the darkness to the light of a brighter day.

The importance of gold and an ever increasing increase of the precious metal are recognized by deep students of economics in every country. It is pertinently pointed out by Benjamin M. Anderson, Jr., of the Chase National Bank, of New York, in a brochure called "A Planned Economy and a Planned Price Level," sound money is impossible unless linked to precious metal of fixed weight and fineness.

A. J. Smith, financial editor of the Vancouver Sun, is in agreement that whether we get stabilization or not, the gold industry will reap benefits. He points out:

"If currencies are eventually stabilized on a devalued basis with relation to gold, with a view to raising commodity prices, the value of gold will rise appreciably above present levels. Assuming that the economic conference cannot agree on any stabilization, which is extremely likely, further inflation of leading currencies is altogether possible. This would, of course, bring currency values down and raise the price of gold proportionately."

United States interests have acquired a large block of stock in the Big Slide Mining Company, providing capital for the development of the property. New machinery is being installed at the property, at the foot of Pavilion Mountain, junction of the Fraser River and Kelly Creek. The highest grade gold ore has been found in the lower levels.

Morton Woolsey Consolidated Mines Company has purchased property in the Bridge River district covering about one and one-half miles off the serpentine field along Bridge River. A crew of men has been put to work on the property. Work on adjoining property is revealing excellent values.

The Newmount Mining Corporation Company of New York has taken over control of Cariboo Consolidated Mines. The New York company owns fifty-one per cent of the stock. The property is on Island and Prosperine mountains, near Barkerville, in the Cariboo.

Machinery installed at the Pavilion Gold property, at the foot of Pavilion Mountain, is working smoothly. Several months of development at Pavilion prove the contention of famous geologists that great deposits of diorite would be found in the area, bearing extremely high gold values.

Mrs. Romer Entertains

Last Friday, June 30, Mrs. Anna Romer, assisted by Mrs. Julia Romer, entertained a number of her friends at a five course luncheon. The table decorations were sweet peas, roses, and ferns. The beautiful centerpiece of sweet peas was made and presented by Mr. Nespoli, a 70-year-old gentleman, a neighbor. After the luncheon a group picture was taken amid the flowers in the yard. Cards were enjoyed and a general good time had by all, who decided Mrs. Romer is a wonderful hostess. Those who enjoyed Mrs. Romer's hospitality were Mesdames Sorensen, Nelson, Jensen, Linn, Norberg, Daniels, Nespoli, Hansen, Rhode, of San Francisco, J. Campbell, Peterson, Hodeck, White, and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Romer and Roberta Romer.

Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Michaelson, of Burlingame, are receiving the congratulations of their many friends upon the birth of a daughter, born on Independence Day. Ed. Michaelson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. Michaelson, of Miriam street.

VETS START DRIVE FOR NEW MEMBERS

The regular monthly meeting of Old Glory Post No. 2044, Veterans of Foreign Wars, was held Friday evening, June 24, with Commander L. W. Johnston presiding, and with the usual good attendance.

The big membership drive is now on, and all members are cordially invited to attend the meetings held the second and fourth Fridays of each month in the Masonic Hall. Get behind your Post officers and show the world that Old Glory Post No. 2044 "knows how."

July 8 will be a day of days with the Veterans. The degree team of the Post will hold their first benefit dance in the Municipal auditorium, with a four piece orchestra. The entire proceeds will be used in uniforming the degree team, which is one of the best in the county. A good time is assured all who attend.

Comrade Nelson of Palo Alto Post No. 69 paid us an official visit, as he is chairman of the hospital committee. This committee deserves the greatest amount of praise for the benevolent work they are doing. The incapacitated veterans have some of the necessities of life, but there is a shortage of cigarettes, socks, handkerchiefs and other small items that can not be furnished them. These items are furnished by the hospital committee of the Five County Council, under whose jurisdiction the work is done.

Comrade Fred A. Collins was returned to office in the Post as 18-months trustee. Comrade Collins has been trustee so long, and his excellent work and untiring efforts so prominent in veteranism, that his election was a foregone conclusion. Such men are needed in all veteran organizations and in all civic work.

We were paid an official visit by Comrade Merton Hubbard, Department Chief of Staff, who gave an interesting talk. The new officers recently elected at Los Vegas have set a goal that is one to which all Veterans of Foreign Wars can be justly proud of. The membership drive is now in full swing and the goal for the ensuing year is about 13,000 new members.

The various committees appointed to bring about improvements in about five or six different departments have begun to function, and it will be only a very short time until their efforts will be felt and the benefits of their work brought to the front.

Auxiliary Items of Interest

The second food sale will be held in the store next to Pete's Grill on Saturday, July 8, under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary. All the food for sale is home cooked, and we all know that the ladies can cook. So the sale should be a success from the quality offered. One can get their entire Saturday dinner already cooked for them at this sale very reasonable.

The Auxiliary Degree team is holding a benefit whist at the home of Mrs. Fred A. Collins on Thursday, July 13, at 8:30 P. M. This team is making such progress that they will be ready for the uniforms long before we anticipated. The address of Mrs. Collins is 174 Irvington street.

FRED R. LINSER, Adjutant.

San Mateo County's
New Charter in Effect

Last Saturday San Mateo county entered a new era of home rule, when the county charter, new organic law by and of the people, officially became the code of county government. The new charter was formally installed at a special meeting of the board of county supervisors.

Members of the board of freeholders who drafted the charter last year, and who have pledged themselves to see that its provisions are faithfully carried out, were present for the installation ceremonies. Civic bodies from all sections of the county were on hand.

On the eve of "charter day," County Manager Walter T. Kellogg, highest officer of the county, to whom all other officials are responsible, the supervisors alone excepted, issued a statement pledging himself to apply a "strict business administration to county government."

CHARGED WITH STEALING CAR

William Stone, of 130 Holloway avenue, was arrested last Monday night about 11 o'clock by Officers A. Hilton and W. Sunderland. Stone is accused of having stolen a car belonging to Laette Caro, of 2030 Franklin street, from Flournoy and San Jose avenues, where Caro parked it earlier in the evening. The accused was still in the city jail at the time this article was written.

Sunday, July 2, District Commissioner and Mrs. L. W. Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collins spent the day at Boy Scout Camp Royaneh, near Cazadero. Boys from Daly City enjoying this session of the camp are Jack Bowley, Richard Schultz and George Johnston from Scout Troop No. 149, and Leroy Johnston from Cub Pack No. 34. All the boys are having a wonderful time.

This camp is situated among the redwoods. The boys sleep on good, comfortable beds in tents set up on wood platforms. The boys in each tent are under the supervision of a trained leader, who instructs them and looks after their welfare. The main mess hall and kitchen is a large wood building, screened all around, under the supervision of competent cooks and other help. The meals are well cooked, of good, wholesome food. The boys can have a second or third helping if they care to.

The Sunday dinner enjoyed by Commissioner and Mrs. L. W. Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Collins, consisted of vegetable salad, stewed chicken with dumplings, green peas, mashed potatoes, plenty of bread and butter, cocoa and cream pie, fresh milk and coffee. All came back for seconds.

The hospital tent is well equipped, in charge of a licensed physician, who is very much interested in boys' work. There is a museum and other places where the boys are taught basket weaving, leather craft, wood craft and other interesting subjects. The sanitary facilities are modern, including hot and cold showers, which the boys enjoy. Swimming in the river, two separate swimming holes, one for the larger boys and one for the smaller boys, all under the constant supervision of experienced lifeguards.

The Boy Scout movement is a wonderful work, and should be encouraged by every one. All of our boys of Daly City can not attend summer camp, but they can and do enjoy all of the activities promoted all year round by our District Council, under the leadership of Chairman Arthur J. Bodien. Visitors are always welcome at all Boy Scout camps and other activities.

THE RENOVIZE PLAN VERSUS DEPRESSION

Among the hundreds of organized efforts to restore prosperity which are now under way, the "Renovize San Mateo County Campaign" is one based on sound economics and common sense.

To date, more than eighty-four communities throughout the nation have sponsored similar campaigns and have resulted in directing approximately one hundred million dollars through the business channels. The campaign for San Mateo county has a three-fold object: First, to improve property values; second, to increase employment; and, third, to force sleeping money into circulation.

This Renovize campaign has the active co-operation of virtually every important civic, commercial and professional organization in the county, because the citizens are convinced that business and not charity needs their help most.

During the Renovize campaign every advertising medium in the county will tell property owners to "RENOVIZE," because IT'S GOOD BUSINESS FOR YOU, and GOOD FOR BUSINESS.

We congratulate the leaders in this Renovize movement for their courageous and intelligent attempt to rout the depression.

This Renovize campaign is worthy of the support of every citizen of the county.

Heavy Traffic Requires Good Concrete Roads

In the country's leading oil producing states where the heavy traffic on the state highway systems requires a lasting pavement whose maintenance cost is low, concrete roads predominate.

Figures taken from a recent issue of American Highways, official magazine of the American Association of State Highway Officials, show that 80 per cent of the hard surfaced roads in Texas, leading oil producing state of the country, are concrete. Oklahoma, third largest oil producer, has concrete for 86 per cent of its hard roads, while California, second largest producer, only has a showing of 59 per cent of concrete. Kansas, fourth oil state, boasts of 75 per cent concrete roads, while Louisiana, the fifth state has 95 per cent.

Texas has a total of 4,592 miles of hard surfaced roads, of which 3,706 are concrete, 419 bituminous concrete, 415 bituminous macadam and 52 miles brick or other block.

California has 3,118 miles of hard surfaced roads, 1,834 being concrete, 865 bituminous concrete, and 419 bituminous macadam.

Oklahoma has 1,696 miles of concrete, 116 of bituminous concrete, 117 of bituminous macadam and 40 of brick for a total of 1,969 miles of pavement in its state system.

Kansas, out of a total of 1,408 miles of hard roads, has 1,068 of concrete, three of bituminous concrete, 175 of bituminous macadam, and 162 of brick and other block.

Louisiana has 1,992 miles of concrete, 83 miles of bituminous macadam, and four miles of brick, for a total of 2,079.

ELECTRIC RANGE RELIABLE AS EVER AFTER 18 YEARS

An electric range which the General Electric Company exhibited at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in San Francisco in 1915 and sold immediately after is still in use, as reliable as ever.

The range, a General Electric model R-1, was purchased in January, 1916, by W. E. Eskew, district manager at Jackson for the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. He used it for three years and then sold it to James Spears, superintendent of the Central Eureka Mine near Jackson.

Ever since then the appliance has been cooking meals in the Spears home. Now, in its eighteenth year of service, it is still "doing a highly satisfactory job."

A few years ago Spears equipped the range with a tort clock which automatically turns on the heat at any hour desired—a device patterned after one of the many automatic features of later models. Apart from the clock, the only maintenance the appliance has required has been the replacing of two heating elements burned out by constant use.

BANK OF AMERICA SHOWS DEPOSIT GAIN

Dividends to be paid during the year 1933 by the Bank of America were covered by a substantial margin in the first six months of operations, the statement of condition as of June 30, 1933, disclosed. The Bank of America N. T. & S. A. and the Bank of America (California) earned, during the half year period, $4,449,000 before depreciation and sundry deductions.

After realized losses and also estimated losses based on depression price levels were written off, an additional $5,591,000 was appropriated to cover any possible future chargeoffs. After providing for the quarterly dividend of $775,000 declared in June and for depreciation, contingencies, etc., there remained $2,229,000 as a net addition to undivided profits for the period, bringing the total as of June 30, 1933, to $12,817,000. The dividends recently declared were at the annual rate of $3,100,000, thus resuming regular payments which were made on an uninterrupted basis for the twenty-seven years of the bank's existence preceding October 1, 1931.

The bank's statement as of June 30, 1933, showed that all rediscounts and bills payable have been entirely eliminated. When the present management resumed control of the institution sixteen months ago, the total amount of the bank's borrowing was $146,455,000.

Despite the adverse business and banking conditions which preceded the national bank moratorium, deposit of the Bank of America showed a gain of $17,700,000 during the past six months, bringing the total as of June 30, 1933, to $767,413,000. During the same period the Bank of America augmented its cash and holdings of United States government obligations by $22,100,000, bringing the total as of June 30, 1933, to $269,700,000, and its investments in loans and discounts were reduced by $17,000,000.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla. Harold B. Johnson, president and editor of Watertown, N. Y., Daily Times, says:

Newspaper advertising is emerging from the depression with greater appeal than ever before. It requires fire and water, high water, flood and famine, to bring out staying qualities. During the past four years lineage was cut down, manufacturers and others tried the experiment of eliminating advertising in so many instances, but when the rainbow of hope began to spread across the sky again they lost no time in making their plans to get back into the newspapers.

The newspapers of America have never before been subjected to such a test of strength as in the recent past. They emerge strong and vigorous. Their qualities have been demonstrated. If they had been less stable and vigorous during this recent depression, if their appeal to the people as an advertising medium had been less, they would not have survived as the American institution they have so long been in America. It was their great trial and they came through admirably.

Fortunate that organization, commercial or otherwise, that was able to keep up its advertising throughout the depression. It emerges strongly fortified today. And fortunate indeed is that community or locality that has a strong newspaper that stood up vigorous, alert, unafraid, throughout the depression, to present itself as an avenue of advertising now in this moment of rehabilitation.

The newspapers contributed more than any other agency toward steadying our people throughout the depression. If it had not been for a free, independent, courageous press that gave the facts and commented honestly, we might have gone most anywhere. But we now come out of it all, recognizing in full measure the value of the newspaper during the past four years as an institution of enlightenment, opinion and dissemination of facts, and appreciating the medium it presents for advertising in this period when we are all striving toward rebuilding and for a full measure of prosperity again.

Eugene Meyer, former governor of the Federal Reserve Board, has purchased the Washington Post, which Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean tried to pawn her jewels, including the reputedly unlucky Hope diamond, to save for her sons. The Post is not a particularly great newspaper, but is well known, chiefly because John Philip Sousa named one of his early marches "The Washington Post," more than forty years ago.

TRAFFIC STRIPE WORK ON STATE HIGHWAYS

During the past year practically 3,500 miles of traffic striping work was done on state highways, involving an expenditure of about $163,000, says a report of the Division of Highways received by the California State Automobile Association. The report contains some interesting facts concerning the traffic stripes, which are regarded as one of the most satisfactory safety measures, particularly on winding roads at night or in foggy weather.

The average cost of placing a four-inch stripe is $40 a mile, and about three-quarters of the expense is represented by the fifteen gallons of traffic lacquer required. The lacquer is manufactured in accordance with specifications prepared on the basis of laboratory tests. Among the requirements are:

That the lacquer shall remain white under service conditions; it shall dry under ordinary circumstances so as to permit traffic to pass over it within fifteen to thirty minutes after it is placed on the road; it shall have good durability under extreme weather conditions; it shall satisfactorily resist the abrasive action of traffic; it shall have good visibility.

Materials which go into the lacquer are tested separately and the manufacturing is done under the supervision of a testing engineer.

In placing the stripes particular care is taken to secure a true, even line and strict standards supporting this requirement are maintained.

With the specifications established for a lacquer designed to fit California conditions, experiments are being made to see if an economy can be effected by reducing the quantity of lacquer per mile. About thirty-five miles of stripes have been placed in San Bernardino and Riverside counties, using varying quantities of nine to fourteen gallons per mile. These test sections will be kept under observation to determine the results of the reduced quantities of lacquer.

In 1854 a Rhode Island sailor brought home from Burma, India, a red rooster of unusual size, and from descendants of that bird the strain known as Rhode Island Reds was developed. Now a bronze statue is to be erected in honor of the historic rooster, which will give the breed something else to crow about.

WINOOKA TO RACE ON SEATTLE TRACK

Winooka's first appearance under colors in the United States will be at Seattle, Washington, according to plans announced by representatives of the famous thoroughbred's owners. Winooka is reported to be coming along famously at John W. Marchbank's Heather Farm, and conditioning is likely to be far enough advanced for starting at the coming session of the Washington Jockey Club, under the management of J. P. Atkin. Later Winooka will be shipped to New York, probably racing at Belmont Park in September.

Kay Spence is giving gallopers of the Marchbank stable thorough tests as to their fitness for summer sport and will take a number of California breeds to Seattle. Trainer Spence is in charge of the American campaigning of the record breaker from "down under." Marchbank runners judged of sufficient quality by Spence will be shipped East with Winooka.

Breeder Marchbank, to whose efforts is due the return of the sport at Tanforan on the high class plane that has resulted in the legislation by the electorate of the state of the pari-mutuel system of wagering, is particularly anxious to have the first meet of importance in Washington achieve success, as he believes such success will assist materially in the building up of breeding in the northern commonwealth. Mr. Marchbank said:

"There should be a community of interest among thoroughbred breeders up and down the coast, and nothing better than such a session as is planned for Washington could be put on to develop that spirit of co-operation. We have a beginning in breeding in California and other states in the West and it is bound to expand at a remarkable pace with the holding of high class race meets."

The universality of the pastime of racing is shown by the coming of Winooka from far-away Australia, and friendships founded on the love of the thoroughbred are demonstrated by the united campaign of owner Marchbank and his friend's from below the equator.

Commercial and municipal airports of the United States are valued at more than $115,000,000.

CALIFORNIA NEWS REVIEW

Gasoline tax receipts in California during May totaled $3,259,475.33. H. G. Cattell of the State Board of Equalization, in announcing the receipts recently, said they showed a loss of 3.8 per cent when compared with the same month in 1932.

A reduction of 25 per cent in cotton acreage of the San Joaquin Valley will be sought as a part of the Federal government's plan to curtail production as the medium for effecting price increases. This was revealed at Fresno at a conference of members of the University of California's agricultural extension service who are assigned to the valley counties.

Raising the total to $2,000,000, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made available $500,000 more of Federal funds for repair and reconstruction of buildings damaged in the March earthquakes in Southern California. An additional commitment to the Unified Rehabilitation Corporation of Los Angeles was approved by the board in accordance with action of Congress earmarking a special fund for this purpose.

Alfalfa needs good drains in winter as well as summer, according to findings made in recent tests in Imperial Valley under the supervision of George Winright, assistant county farm adviser. It has been the opinion of the Agricultural Extension Service for some time that alfalfa needs to have a real penetration of water about its roots during the cool season for best results and the plots under tests have substantiated that theory.

This time last year walnut trees in San Fernando Valley were loaded with embryo nuts, but the present situation is not so good. According to a recent survey, it is estimated the walnut crop there will be "off" about 50 per cent, due to two or three frosty spells in the early spring which killed the earliest budding. There are hundreds of walnut trees in the back yards of Van Nuys homes, and because of the frosts most of these are bare of fruit.

Lieut. D. E. Wait and his mechanic, W. R. Rubier, found they had lost their landing gear while their plane was making a practice flight from North Island Naval Air Station, San Diego. Wait circled low over the air station, a signal of distress, and observed that a salvage boat was launched in the bay. Immediately he set his plane down on the calm water so close to the boat that he and Rubier were able to scramble into it from the wing of the plane without getting wet. The plane was not damaged.

Motorists are warned by the California Highway Patrol to comply with the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act relating to head and tail lights. Orders have been issued for patrol officers to stop violators and issue citations to all offenders. The check will be made in a series of "surprise raids" at widely separated points throughout the State. Officers are instructed to be on the alert for glaring headlights and for cars equipped with only one head lamp or without a tail light.

California's beer-drinking capacity foamed to a total of 3,660,882 gallons during May, yielding $73,217 to the parched state treasury. This was announced by the state board of equalization. State statisticians set adding machines in motion and clicked off a per capita consumption of half a gallon of beer in May, based on a population of 6,160,000. These per capita figures also revealed that each Californian quaffed 10.87 drinks, or nearly eleven seven-ounce glasses of 3.2 beer. Beer taxes became effective on April 7 and the revenue for the remainder of April totaled $55,670, based on a consumption of 2,783,543 gallons.

Outlying Kern County cities and communities will benefit by more than $100,000 annually from the $1,000,000 reduction in rates of the Southern California Gas Company, ordered by the State Railroad Commission, it was estimated recently. Approximately $104,600 per year will be saved by consumers in the four southern San Joaquin Valley counties affected. The company agreed voluntarily to the reduction but the commission apportioned the cut rates in the company's territory. Estimated reductions in dollars by localities in San Joaquin Valley are: Port Tejon, Grapevine, Lebec, $700; Tehachapi, $500; McKittrick, $200; Delano, McFarland, Shafter, Wasco, $10,000; Corcoran, Dinuba, Exeter, Hanford, Kingsburg, Lemoore, Lindsay, Parlier, Porterville, Reedley, Tulare, Visalia, Armona, Caruthers, Cutler, Orosi, Riverdale, Strathmore and Sultana, $93,200.

Governor Ralph has appointed Mrs. Florence C. Porter of Bakersfield to be a member of the State Board of Education, in place of C. L. McLane of Fresno, resigned.

Dr. Giles S. Porter, State Director of Public Health, recently announced a quarantine of all mussels along the California Coast from Monterey County to Klamath River. San Francisco Bay area was excepted. Laboratory examinations have shown mussels from certain sections of the coast are poisonous, he announced.

Normally, deer do not constitute a menace to park visitors, but boys at Wolverton Camp No. 3, of the Conservation Corps, rate them as a nuisance. A truck load of hay arrived to fill mattress covers for the workers' bunks. It was piled near the camp storehouse for distribution the next morning. When morning came, the hay was scarcely visible for the crowd of deer massed around it. Washing is not safe on the line at night. Early risers the other morning found a doe finishing off the legs of a suit of underwear, while a big buck was going up the hillside with a sock hanging from his mouth.

The San Juan Bautista Mission, now crumbling with age, was the scene of a pageant commemorating its founding 136 years ago at San Juan Bautista recently. More than 6000 people from all sections of California sat beside the still stately old mission and saw enacted the romantic events connected with its history. Many of the pageant players, whose forefathers settled the San Juan Valley, relived for a brief hour the colorful careers of the pioneers. The pageant theme was woven about Father Lausen, founder of the mission, and Fathers Jose de Martarena and Pedro Adriano Martinez, who labored in the cause of the church in the early days of California.

Kern County's contention that every farmer is entitled to relief under the new Federal legislation and that present arbitrary lines are discriminatory will be brought to the attention of Federal loan representatives by a committee of civic, business, agricultural and legislative leaders being selected by A. E. Hoagland, president of Kern Chamber of Commerce, and T. M. Martin, president of Kern Farm Bureau. The committee will collect data on Kern County to be presented to Harry Morgenthau, Jr., governor of the farm-credit administration, and Willard Ellis of the Federal Land Bank at Berkeley, in an attempt to show that the asserted arbitrary line set is without foundation and must be changed in order that all farmers may receive assistance.

The Fraternal Order of Eagles concluded its annual State convention at Long Beach recently after selecting Oroville for the 1934 session. Francis Carr of Shasta was elected president; E. L. Jewett, Fresno, vice-president; George Vice, Sacramento, treasurer; William R. Hagerty, San Francisco, secretary; Fred Zieger, conductor; Ed A. Carmichael, Hanford, outer guard; James McCormick, Rio Vista, inner guard; Nels E. Nelson, Hayward; Harley Hall, Santa Rosa, and John C. Sachs, San Diego, trustees, and Fred Wilson, San Jose, chaplain. In the ritual contests Los Angeles won first in Class A and Oakland first in Class B in the men's competition. The women's drill team of the Oakland auxiliary won first honors, Berkeley was second, and South Gate third. The women's ritual award was won by Oak Park. The Sacramento drum corps took first honors, Oakland second, San Francisco third and Los Angeles fourth.

Revival in mining will be reflected at the California State Fair, which has set aside September 8, next, as California Mining Day. The mining department of the Sacramento Chamber of Commerce will have charge of the program, which will include many contests. A double-jack hand drilling contest with the best teams from each of the mining counties competing for honors will be the outstanding feature. Prizes will total $225, with $100 for the first prize, $75 for the second and $50 for third. A team entry of $20 will be charged. All entries must be received not later than August 1, next. A mining luncheon at the fair grounds also is being planned, with a speaker, Clarence E. Jarvis of the chamber's mining committee is chairman of the speakers' committee and Sam Hamilton is chairman of mining day arrangements. J. O. Tobey is chairman of the mining department. Mining counties will be requested to feature mining in their exhibits. An invitation is being extended to the State of Nevada to participate.

Approximately 500 public works projects aggregating $127,461,687 have been submitted the California State Chamber of Commerce by cities and counties throughout the State, after a series of regional conferences to stimulate unemployment relief under the national industrial recovery act. Thus reported the State Chamber, declaring that the total amount covered but 340 of projects, since 160 were submitted with cost figures unavailable. "A large part of the $43,352,979 cost of reported public works projects in the San Francisco Bay area is made up of highway construction and related work," the report stated, "with bridge approaches, which account for $22,000,000, noted as the largest single item. Among the building projects in the bay region, the proposed Alameda County court house and the exposition buildings of the San Francisco-San Mateo District Agricultural Association are leading items. The city of Oakland lists sewer projects, totaling almost $3,000,000."

The California and Oregon Coast Railroad Company recently asked the Interstate Commerce Commission permission to extend its railroad seventy-two miles from its present terminus at Waters Creek, Oregon, to the Pacific Coast at Crescent City, California. The company wants to finance the extension through a loan from the Reconstruction Corporation, the amount of which was not given. The application said the territory through which the proposed extension would run would serve "the richest undeveloped hundred miles in the United States."

Quaint Ruffle-Trimmed Frocks

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SPEAKING in terms of statistics, if all the ruffles that trim this season's prettiest frocks should be measured yard for yard and placed in a single row, they would extend around the circumference of the earth—well, we will leave it to you to figure out for yourself how many times. Anyway, what we started out to say is that designers are employing no end of ruffles on summer gowns.

Ruffles have a way of bespeaking the alluringly feminine as no other form of decoration seems to have, which is exactly the point we wish to stress, namely, that the call of the present mode is for lovely ingenue types in frocks which "say it" via quaint wide flounces and countless wee ruffles and ruchings and cunning puffs and the like.

The exquisitely sheer materials, chiefly organdies, chiffons, mousseline de soie, dotted swisses and cotton nets upon which fashion places such unmistakable emphasis this season, yield so gracefully to this form of ornamentation it is no wonder that a veritable riot of ruffles and such now adorn the mode.

There is nothing conventional about the new ruffled effects. As a matter of fact, ruffles and their near relations such as puffs and frills of various sorts are performing the most audacious capers imaginable. They are as apt to run up and down the length of a skirt as to go around and around, or perhaps they will go into a huddle on each shoulder or play merry-go-round in dozens and dozens of tiny ruffles which achieve a knee-depth hemline, and when they form themselves into little diaphanous shoulder capes made of organdie or sheer mousseline as many ruffles have a habit of doing this season, it would seem as if fancy could conceive of nothing more flattering in the way of feminine adornment.

Just to show you how perfectly lovely ruffles can be when handled by an artist who knows "lines" we are illustrating in the foreground of this picture a "dream of a gown" designed by Lyolene of Paris. This charming debutante dance frock is fashioned of an all-white chiffon of bemberg. It does not seem possible, to look at this exquisite sheer weave, that it launders beautifully, but it does. Not only that, but it is wrinkle proof. The narrow rose velvet sash which ties in a simple bow at the back gives just the right touch of color.

If you like dotted swiss you will be charmed with the dress shown to the left, in the group. For this model of pale blue dotted swiss is combined with white organdie. Look close and you will discover that the little bodice of swiss fastens in points at the front over a semi-bodice of the organdie. Puffs on the sleeves of the organdie give that sprightly youthful silhouette which is characteristic of all gowns this season which are made of the popular starched sheers.

As to the girlish frock pictured to the right, isn't it just a "darling!" We think it is. It is made of quaint checked organdie—white and any color which suits your fancy best. See how fitted-to-a-nicety is the skirt about the hips. Young girls insist on this sleek, slim silhouette for their newer gowns. The broad ruffle which is cut on the bias is sewed on with a "heading." The puffed sleeves and the full ruffle about the neckline, and the large bow tell the story of present fashion trends most eloquently. The girle of black crepe ribbon is also a "last word" feature.

WIDE SAILOR HATS ARE NOW IN FAVOR

If you can wear them, be sure and include in your hat wardrobe for summer one of the dashing new merry widow sailors. In spite of all the rumors that fashion has gone high hat, these big shallow crowned sailors are increasingly popular.

One of the smartest is made of white rough straw, with a very wide brim, and a crown not more than an inch and a half high. A wreath of field flowers in bright red, blue and yellow encircles the crown.

Another sailor, with a more modified brim, and a low square crown, is made in stiffened white pique, with a navy grosgrain band at the back, and a nosegay of field flowers perched in the middle of the front.

Camisole Is Shown in New Fashions for Hot Weather

The camisole is back! Isn't that a laugh? But what else to do with these new transparent sweater blouses and thin dimit, organdie and lace things that all the world can see through? It's a problem for the undie-world and no other, hence the thrice-told tale of the camisole. Of course, you can attach it to a slip, or a pair of panties, so that there is just the bother of one piece, but many of the shops are showing them aloof and unattached to anything.

When you go to buy an I-see-you blouse or sweater, the salesgirl immediately brings out her latest assortment of camisoles, taking for granted, naturally, that if you went in to buy a pair of new shoes, you wouldn't buy the left foot and refuse to take the right one. The relationship in the new fashion field is just as close.

Tailored Cottons

Trim tailored cotton suits in tones of beige, gray and navy blue are ready for sports wear in the country and in informal wear in town. Most of them are worn with white cotton blouses which may be kept fresh by rubbing.

IT'S BRAND NEW

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's the newest thing in the way of pajamas. Step into the right leg, wrap the left leg around, tie the ends in front and you are in the smartest, most comfortable pajamas you ever wore. These clever sylo-pajamas, as they are called, are as clever for home as for beach wear. They are attractive in stripes as you see here and they are just as good-looking made of gay plaided fabrics.

Linen Smartness

Linen shoes and hats are correct with linen suits and dresses this summer. Remember that they, too, can be washed as easily and as frequently as the dresses themselves.

Lingerie Trimming

The significance of lingerie trimmings cannot be over-emphasized. Pique in white, eggshell or dark colors will be used a lot with prints and plain color costumes.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

Washington.—The patronage dam at last has broken. With congress out of the way, the administration has begun to serve the pie in a big way. But Washington observers have noted something new in the pie-dispensing system now being employed. The breaking of the dam that held up appointments while congress was made to do the bidding of the President, and that created such a terrible traffic jam around the pie counter, has shown that being a Democrat in the government service means little more than being a Republican insofar as priority for reappointment is concerned. The flood that came after the dam broke has washed out about as many Democrats as Republicans. It is always to be expected that the winning political party will put its own men in. I have heard no complaint about that course because it has happened so many times in our history that it is taken for granted.

From what I have been able to see and to hear, President Roosevelt cannot be blamed for the ruthless character of the dismissals except indirectly. He has gone so far even as to say that some three or four thousand postmasters, now serving under commissions by President Hoover, will be allowed to remain on their jobs until their commissions expire. This has caused a howl among the clique that appears to be bent on grinding its own axes because they want those jobs, and unless the President stands firm they are going to get them.

The Treasury seems to be affected less than other departments. Secretary Woodin has picked most of his people, according to well informed individuals, but he has had to accept one or two men to whom senators were indebted.

The treasury secretary has run into some difficulties, I am told, because he insists on having investigations made of men whose appointments are recommended to him. He was reported to have made a Democratic senator very angry because he would not name the senator's candidate as an internal revenue collector in one state without the prerequisite of an investigation. But the investigation was made just the same.

The President and his advisers have played a brilliant hand in the new deal in their maneuvers at creating new jobs out of old ones. Take the farm legislation, put into the hands of Secretary Wallace of the Department of Agriculture. It is made to appear that the handling of the so-called price parity law which is the old domestic allotment plan in a new suit, and the other new farm aid laws will require something like 60,000 staff workers throughout the country. The farm loan and the home loan machinery, two separate organizations, will provide jobs running into the thousands. The legislation that is supposed to prevent blue-sky securities from being sold to an unsuspecting public likewise will enable the appointment of many more, and last but not least the public construction administration and the industrial recovery administration are two more agencies offering berths by the score to deserving supporters of the Roosevelt ticket.

It is fair to say that many of the underlings, the clerks and supporting cast in the several new agencies are being named from lists of those who have lost their jobs in the face of economy which Lewis Douglas, director of the budget, is taking so seriously. But as far as I have been able to learn, there is no dearth of jobs that can be and are being filled purely on a political basis. The hardest job the politicians have, it appears, is in sorting out the right applicants to recommend among those thousands they have been receiving while Mr. Roosevelt kept the pie closet locked.

Without wasting any time, the administration has opened the spigot on the tank of millions to speed industrial recovery through use of public work in construction. The last congress voted a total of $3,300,000,000 for public construction, it will be recalled, and now the machinery to use these funds has been set in motion. It takes time to get government machinery ready even to spend money, but the haste with which the operations have been started is looked upon here as commendable although only public highway building and the fixing up of army posts and national cemeteries are involved in the first moves.

Out of the gigantic fund, $400,000,000 has been set aside and allocated to the use of the various states in the building of roads and $135,000,000 has been marked for use in reconditioning army posts and national cemeteries. Expenditure of those funds, of course, will make jobs, which is the prime purpose of the program, but there are men in high places who are unable to reconcile the course. Obligation of these funds was permitted after July 1, so that there ought to be a considerable boom in road construction throughout the country in the next few months.

In making the funds available to the states, the federal government laid down several conditions to insure that they would not be used to overbuild one section while another part of the state remained without new highways. Further, the states are required to spend at least 50 per cent of their total share within the confines of cities and towns, for there is where the greatest amount of unemployment exists. Another requirement is that secondary roads, farm-to-market systems and highways of that character, may be constructed with 25 per cent of the state's total, while the other 25 per cent may be expended upon completion of the federal highway system. The point of all of this is that the federal government is determined to enforce a distribution of the funds to as many areas as possible. This serves the purpose of providing the work as near as may be to the unemployed and prevents "hogging" of available construction by any section.

The government also put its finger on the methods to be used. It is saying to each of the states that no convict labor may be used, that the contractors must pay wages that permit of a decent and comfortable living standard, and that workers may not be kept on the job longer than 30 hours per week in order that the maximum number of workers may have jobs. This principle is regarded as especially important because it establishes the six-hour day and the five-day week for the first time on a large scale. How long it can be maintained is now a matter of pure conjecture, but it will remain as the principle on all federal grants to states for highway building during the expenditure of these funds.

The allocation of the $400,000,000 fund by states is as follows: Alabama,

Allocation by States

While most of us believe there has been a depression on throughout the country, none would believe it to be true if the sole yardstick for measuring business conditions was the tourist travel through the national Capitol building in Washington. Although accurate figures are not available, the corps of guides who lead visitors through the great building on Capitol hill tell that they have had what they call a big year thus far. To the uninitiated, it is plain to see that thousands of persons are making a visit to Washington this year, for there has been a steady stream of visitors passing through those long corridors day after day in an almost unending procession. The same is true of the Washington monument, that tall obelisk ranging 555 feet in the air as a mark of the reverence held for the father of his country. Passing by the monument almost any time during the day, one can see a familiar sight, a queue of tourists awaiting their turn to ride to the top in the slow moving elevator within the square walls of the structure.

A few nights ago some of the folks in the treasury had occasion to work late and in the course of the evening, one of the colored messengers was asked to visit an office for a file of papers, the regular occupant of that office having gone home. The messenger went but came back soon, saying he could not get in. An investigation revealed the office was unlocked. Some further inquiry elicited the information from the messenger that two years ago an official had died at his desk and the messenger maintained he had since observed ghosts in the office.

Dogs Guard Museum

Two big German shepherd dogs supplement the guards and elaborate electrical devices which protect the Boston Museum of Fine Arts at night. Should anyone linger in the building with malicious intent there would be no way for him to get out after the big doors were closed for the day and he could not elude the acute hearing and sentinels, smell of these faithful dog sentinels, even though it was possible for him to escape detection by other means.

INDEPENDENCE DAY

July 4 marked the one hundred and fifty-seventh anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress, and the birth of our nation. As time has proved, this was one of the most significant legislative acts in the history of the world.

The idea of a separation of the American colonies from England was first expressed in the Congress through a resolution by Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, on June 7, 1776, but it was not passed immediately. A committee composed of Thomas Jefferson as chairman, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, R. R. Livingston and Roger Sherman was appointed on June 10 to draw up a suitable declaration in accordance with Lee's resolution, and the drafting of the immortal document was entrusted to Jefferson.

The Declaration as written by Jefferson, with slight amendments by Franklin and Adams, was presented to the Congress on June 28. Lee's resolution was passed on July 2, and the Declaration of Independence was adopted on July 4.

After the formal document had been engrossed on parchment it was signed by the delegates present in Congress on August 2, 1776, and by the absentees on later dates. One delegate, McKean of Delaware, did not sign until 1781.

Of the fifty-six signers, seven were not members of Congress on July 4, and of those present on that day, seven never signed the Declaration. All except eight of the signers were born on American soil; thirty-four were lawyers, thirteen planters or farmers, nine merchants, five physicians, two mechanics, one clergyman, one mason, and one surveyor.

Two of the signers, Adams and Jefferson, became President. Nearly all played important parts in the early days of the republic. It is fitting that we should pay tribute to their memory, and especially on Independence Day, which was celebrated last Tuesday.

An Alabamian declares that "the legislature is on trial as to its common sense and legislative ability." And probably will be found not guilty on either.

A Pennsylvania paper relates in connection with a larceny trial that the accused "came from a good family and was drunk when he came."

A New York doctor says old age needs whisky. But not as much as present day whisky needs age.

BUSINESS LOOKS UP

The continued improvement in business and employment conditions which has been in evidence during recent months has begun to convince even the most pessimistic that we are really on the road to national economic recovery at last.

Many factors are contributing to this most desirable result, and it can not be doubted that the bold legislative program enacted by Congress at the request of President Roosevelt is one of the most important of those factors. This can be freely said without the slightest political partisanship, because leaders of both parties have had a part in passing this legislation.

Among the measures recently passed by Congress and various state legislatures, it is believed by many that the laws legalizing the sale of 3.2 per cent beer have been especially beneficial in affording widespread unemployment relief, while at the same time contributing to the cause of real temperance through curtailing the consumption of vile bootleg liquor.

Many industries, including the manufacture of brewery equipment, bottles, barrels and boxes, ice machinery and refrigeration facilities, and other supplies have given a new market to products of the farm, forest and factory, as well as employment to many men.

Taxes paid to the Federal, state and local governments during the short time in which the sale of beer has been permitted have exceeded all expectations.

President Roosevelt himself is said to believe legalization of beer to be an important factor in his recovery program, and to an unprejudiced observer it seems to be working out that way.

SCHOOLS AND BUSINESS

Considerable criticism has arisen in certain quarters of late because of the co-operation of groups of business men with schools and colleges in the matter of text-book revision. The critics assume that the interest of business men in this matter is entirely selfish and actuated by a desire to direct the thought of students along lines in conformity with big business. The business men declare that they only seek to bring the text-books up to date.

The subject is one of great importance, and one concerning which it is not safe to jump at conclusions. Most certainly it is in the interest of the students, as well as in the interest of the public, that they should have accurate information in their text-books.

The United States Bureau of Education, in an official statement some time ago, said:

"In the past many text-books for commercial subjects have been prepared by authors whose business experience, if any, was not sufficient to enable them to record accurately the practices in business. As a result of research 4,560 corrections were made and reported to twenty-six publishers of the text. The responses from the authors and publishers have proved the worthiness of business men's efforts to put commercial education on a fact basis."

No reasonable person could object to such co-operation between business men and the schools. It is only when attempts are made, from whatever source, to inject prejudiced matter into school books that a halt should be called. Each case should be considered on its merits, and wholesale criticism, without discrimination as to the real purposes sought, is unwarranted and unjust.

WHITE LIES

The old question of whether a falsehood is ever justified is brought to mind by the death of Mrs. Minna Preiskel in New Jersey at the age of 72. A series of falsehoods had cheered her old age for years.

Mrs. Preiskel was critically ill when her son, Robert, was killed in action in France on March 26, 1918. Her doctors warned that if she were told the sad news it would kill her. She was never told.

Her family caused a letter to be sent to her supposedly from her son, telling her that he was employed in France. Letters written in the United States and sent to France to be remailed to the mother were received and read to her, telling of her boy's imagined doings abroad. In all 520 of these spurious letters were received by the waiting invalid, who until the last had hopes of seeing her son again.

Similar "white lies" have prevented mental anguish in thousands of cases the world over. Who can say with assurance that it was wrong to tell them?

THEY CAN'T SPELL

It is reported that among 298 young men and women who took a civil service examination in New York recently, all but three failed in spelling.

This is not surprising to those who have had occasion to observe the spelling of the average high school graduate, or even that of some college men and women.

Why our schools do not give more attention to spelling is an unsolved mystery. Hundreds of hours are devoted to subjects which a pupil never thinks of after leaving school, yet the art of spelling, which must be practiced every day of his life, is given scanty consideration.

Perhaps it is thought that everyone should be permitted to develop originality. If so, the plan works well. Few show greater originality in any respect than in spelling.

A New York real estate man brings suit to force a cemetery to pay taxes. And we had always hoped to say good-bye to the tax collector at the grave.

Dr. Vizetelly says the average person uses only one-tenth of his brains, which is our idea of false economy.

A NATIONAL NUISANCE

Quite a lot of crusading has been done with a view to doing away with the barricades of billboards which mar the beauty of our natural scenery, but in spite of some progress made here and there, the billboard is still an outstanding national nuisance.

If this nuisance is ever to be effectively abated it must be done through convincing advertisers that their part in perpetuating it is bad business for them. Appeals to sentiment and love of the beautiful are generally futile.

State, county and city authorities can aid in the movement very materially, however, but it is often difficult to spur them to action. An example of commendable activity in the fight against ugliness is seen in Georgia, where the county commissioners of Fulton county, in which Atlanta is situated, ordered the removal of all signs and billboards along the highways under their jurisdiction. The member who sponsored this measure said:

"There is a proper place for everything, including advertising. Our highways are designed to give tourists and Atlanta motorists the most beautiful scenery possible, but that scenery is being ruined by the ever increasing number of billboards and signs."

This is true for every county in America where the encroachments of the "outdoor advertiser" have been permitted to have unrestricted sway. Billboards in locations which render them offensive are irritating to the public, without benefit to the concerns which pay for them with the mistaken idea that they are building business good will.

Vaudeville is one hundred years old, and some of the jokes seem good for another century.

"Mother Minerva," still holding the fort above El Camino Real near Colma, celebrated her 101st birthday on Sunday. Mrs. Hartman, Civil War and Spanish-American War nurse, celebrated the event quietly in San Mateo at the home of H. R. Condy, of Laurel avenue.

JURY ADVISED TO PROBE DOG RACES

Among the different topics that will probably be up for discussion by the San Mateo county grand jury as a result of instructions issued by Judge Franklin Swart last Friday will be an investigation of dog racing, to see if it is in violation of the gambling laws, and if so found, to close the tracks and prosecute the officials.

The grand jury is urged to find out how much money is banked every night by the dog tracks to find out if the good the tracks do is not overbalanced by "the general drain on the community and the resultant tendency toward delinquency and dependency that will follow in the future."

In the communication to the grand jury, Judge Swart criticized the board of supervisors for paying for publication of the official proceedings, pointing out that the newspapers publish court news for its news value.

The jury is given a list of nineteen questions which they are told to ask the four supervisors, "Engineer Hendricks" and County Executive Kellogg, in relation to the meeting at the relief home June 21. The questions indicate a purpose to prove that the meeting was held to discuss appointment of Hendricks as engineer, that an agreement was reached despite some protest from Hendrick, and that Hendricks agreed to quit his job at Belmont and become engineer for the county, agreeing to maintain the present foremen and the road crews.

Judge Jesse L. Scott, after eighteen years on the bench at Greeley, Neb., declares that there are more brawls and fights during hot weather. We have gotten somewhat "hot under the collar" ourselves of late, but have felt no urge to make matters worse by indulging in fistfuffs. We simply remove the collar.

And now comes another disillusion which shows that we can't always believe what we see or hear. Path-finder declares that barking dogs heard in radio programs are generally not dogs at all, but persons who can imitate them. And, appropriately enough, the most expert imitator of a dog's bark is named Brandley Barker.

County Food Contracts Let for Fiscal Year

Contracts for supplying milk, meat, poultry and bread to three county institutions, the relief home, community hospital and detention home, beginning the new fiscal year, were let last Friday on the first three items, Purchasing Agent Ernest Werder announced.

The milk contract was awarded the Millbrae Dairy Company on a bid of 18 cents a gallon, less two per cent for payment in thirty days, a saving of seven cents a gallon over last year, said Werder. The institutions use approximately 1,700 gallons a month.

Meat for the next three months will be supplied by five firms, Baumgarten Bros., Del Monte Meat Company, all of San Francisco, and the Virden and Swift packing companies, South San Francisco, at a saving over last year, Werder said. Poultry will be supplied by Charles Cornea, San Francisco.

Owing to the new federal tax on flour, the price of bread will be a cent and a half per pound increase over last year. The Golden Crust Bakery, Redwood City, whose bid was five and one-half cents per pound, was awarded the contract for the coming year. About 2,800 pounds of bread are consumed a month.

SYNOPSIS

With his yacht, the Intrepid, practically abandoned by its crew, Felix Horton, millionaire, with his mother, his daughter Nan, and Roy Stuart, puts into Squaw Harbor, Alaska, to recruit. Failing to secure sailors, Horton engages a bunch of nondescript strangers there. A gigantic Pole called Sandomar, deaf but not dumb, is their leader. Captain Wayne, the Intrepid's skipper, is an old friend of Eric's. Eric, unemployed, but holding master's papers, and he engages to sail as chief officer. Horton is seeking uncharted islands of which he has heard. Nan and Eric indulge in a moonlight flirtation, which brings them both to the threshold of interest in each other, if not of love. The Intrepid is deliberately wrecked by one of Sandomar's crew. Eric takes command of a small boat, in which are Horton, his mother and daughter, Nan's maid, Marie, and Roy Stuart. Unable to help, they watch Sandomar kill Captain Wayne and leave the ship with his crew. Wayne has thrown Eric a revolver. Aleut Indians help the party ashore. From one of them, speaking a little English, Eric learns there is no communication with the outside world.

"Name, she Aleut word mean 'Place-Where-Everything-Gone-Away.' Chechaquo no say'm."

"Forlorn island," Eric spoke quietly. "Fits it pretty well, I should say."

Roy said, "Chechaquo, how do nearly sixty people manage to live here?"

"We catch salmon, sea-lion sometimes, roots, berries, birds, in sea we catch seals, halibut, codfish. But we no dare go out very far from harbor, bad currents take birdie into rocks. So fish, halibut, codfish mighty scarce. Sixty people go along; more than sixty, everybody go hungry. So we no have more than sixty."

He spoke calmly, casually, and Eric watched him with steady, narrowed eyes. "How do you manage it—not to have more than sixty?"

"We keep count. When one baby more than sixty born, he die. Mother, she cry sometime, but she know do no good. Other women, they put baby out on beach, wind she blow, baby no live long."

"Rather like an exclusive club," Roy said grimly. "Someone has to die off before another can get in. But don't look so shocked, Ericsson. Plenty of primitive people practice infanticide—some of the Eskimos, for instance—but it's usually haphazard. This is very new and interesting, keeping an exact count."

"It's horrible! When the population gets too large, why can't some of the men defy the danger and strike out for new lands? That's the way real men do."

"And get themselves drowned? That's romanticism—in contrast with good sense. The only thing that is troubling me is that now the population is seventy-six."

Presently Chechaquo led them to the church. Of the light that some far-shining Russian zealot had brought to Forlorn island nearly two centuries before, only a dim glimmer remained. In the front half of a two-room turf house was a crude stone altar, a silver icon in the recessed space of old Moscow, and one gold candlestick. Here the Aleuts came to chant the prayers they did not understand, to the white man's God on whom they had grafted their own animal gods and their devils of sea and storm. In the rear room lived Fireheart, direct descendant of the priest, and custodian of the magic he passed down.

She came out at once, a slender girl with slanted black eyes, her tawny skin scarcely darker than Nan's golden tan. Only a drop of white blood flowed in her veins, but it had refined her features and quickened her mind. She gazed at the two white men half in awe, half in exultation.

"Fireheart make prayer for you to come," she told them in soft, throaty tones. "Prayer, him answered, God, he big, strong god, give Fireheart what she want."

"But why, Fireheart?" Roy asked. "What did you want of white people?"

"Fireheart, she hear stories pass down from priest. She think, dream, wonder about white man's country; think, pray maybe sometime white people come here. So she make Chechaquo talk white man's talk, so she ready when they come. She heap lonely; tired of little island; think maybe white man come, take her away."

Turning from Roy, she caressed Eric's bare arm. "Fireheart think your skin heap pretty, heap smooth, too, like other fur." What might be a jealous gleam came into her slanted black eyes. "Fireheart see two white girls come in boat, with old woman. Maybe one your wife?"

Roy broke in quickly. "Neither is his wife, but the girl with the curly dark hair will be my wife soon."

"Fireheart no care about you. I no see you come in dream, I see tall man, with eyes like sea, with skin like snow." She reached a brown hand and stroked Eric's cheek. "You no marry other girl. By'mby maybe you marry me—Fireheart, priestess of lost people—and we have baby with skin like snow, too."

Fireheart's black eyes were brimming, and Eric must answer them straight. "A white man does not marry until he is in love," he told her kindly. "Love comes to him when it comes; he has no power to seize it, or to make it go."

"Then you no see Fireheart in dream, like I see you? But you see her now, maybe you catch love soon. Her arms, they strong—they hold you tight. She young, and she white girl, like you. And she no say this to any man before."

When Eric and Roy were out of hearing, each got the first real glimpse of the other's soul. They respected each other deeply, they could work together toward certain ends, yet they were as remote as pine and palm. Eric had inherited the idealism of the North. The basis of his strength was character. But Roy's guiding light was logic. He was ruled and guided by his brain, never his heart. His superior intellect ran cold as an electric dynamo. He could be kindly, brave where bravery was something more than a tradition, but he took life as he found it, made the best of it, and never gazed beyond.

Which of these two types have contributed most to civilization—the intellectual or the emotional, the realist or the dreamer? Which is most important in the ultimate destiny of mankind? Which would triumph in this island adventure—a re-enactment, on a small scale, of man's long war with savagery and the raw powers of nature? Only time could tell.

"Ericsson, this girl is our one hope," Roy said. "If you'll play your part, we can be free in two months. She's fallen in love with you at first sight—whatever that means—and as priestess, she controls the island. If the young men of the tribe would go with us, we could reach civilization. You know that, as well as I. They could feel their way in a dozen covered kayaks; a good many would be lost, but some would be sure to find the strait."

"Throw their lives away to save our own skins? That's what it amounts to."

"What of it? An inbred, hopeless handful of savages. Eric, we must look after ourselves first—and our women—that's the first law of life."

"But I'd have to play square with Fireheart. She's no common squaw—to these people she's a semi-sacred being, whose virginity is closely guarded—and the only way I could induce her to raise the taboo would be to marry her in her own church, and take her with me to the outside world."

"Oh, you'd have to pretend it was the real thing. But for you the ceremony would be an empty form: when we reached the first settled island, we could buy her a lot of new dresses, a phonograph if she wanted it, and leave her happy. . . . And really, she's not a bad looking girl. She'd make your stay here very pleasant."

Eric's blue eyes had a cold shine. "You can drop that, Stuart. I wouldn't break trust with Fireheart even if we don't leave here for the rest of our natural lives. If I married her here in her church, I'd stand by it, but I'm not going to cross my blood with Aleuts to save you or anyone else."

A cynical gleam came into Roy's cold eyes. "It's plain that Horton and I will have to take matters into our own hands. We can't rely on you; you're too d—d gallant. And I warn you that our methods may be a lot tougher on your Aleut friends than a little romance with a squaw."

They returned to the barabara to find their comrades rolled in blankets, asleep. Sandomar's gang were roaming about the island, fraternizing with the natives, saving their strength for trials certain to come. Eric and Roy flung themselves down on the furs and rested, too.

It was mid-afternoon before they had all wakened, rubbed their eyes, and definitely crossed the border between life-like dreams and fantastic reality. Nan now demanded that she know the worst. "I'm grown up, and able to stand it. Are we going to spend a week at this charming winter resort?"

Roy hesitated, but Mother Horton thrust her lean elbows into his ribs. "Tell her!" the clear old voice urged. "If she'd use her head, she'd figure it out for herself."

"A week from now, our salmon fishing should be well under way," Eric said gravely. "In three months the summer will be gone, and the fur-seal herd heading south. A little more bad luck, carelessness, or overconfidence, and we'll be gone, too, not rescued, but dead. The most we can hope for this winter is just to live—to hang on. Then, if we can keep up our strength and our numbers, to plan some way to freedom."

The girl looked at him straight. "And if we survive at all, we may be here three years? Is that it?"

"I should guess that we'll either win—or definitely lose—within one year."

She gazed a long time into the hissing fire. "I suppose we'd all be lucky to have gone down with the ship."

"You might suppose so—I don't," Eric's tone was deep and rough. "I thank God I'm here, still able to fight. I'm going to make the best of it and, as soon as you get your bearings, I know you will, too. And there's a way out, if we can just find it."

"And we'll get along," Mother Horton chirped. "Thank heaven I've still got two good teeth to chew those tough little birds."

Marie put two leather handbags saved from the wreck in the middle of the floor. "Here are our earthly possessions," Nan said gravely. "I think we'd better see what we have now and divide up."

She dumped the contents of the bags on the floor. On top, more precious than rubies, lay half a dozen cakes of soap which the old housekeeper had put in with her own skinny hands. "When they're gone, in about two weeks, we'll have to make soft soap with fat and ashes," Mother Horton explained. "And by crackie, fifty years of luxury hasn't made me forget how!"

There were two identical safety razors, two packages of blades, and a stropping device. Sharing these, each of the four men could make some sort of a decent toilet, a considerable factor in their morale. There were three brushes, plenty of combs, and scissors; a pound of tobacco (when it was gone the pipe-smokers could use the little willow bark); and again Mother Horton's contribution, some needles and thread, a carton of cigarettes, and a Bible.

There was simple jewelry—the best had been left behind in a bank-vault; articles of apparel; and for toilet use peculiarly feminine, towels; a carton of matches, this was Roy's inspiration; a wicked-looking hunting knife that Wilcox had bought in Seattle; Roy's ethnological notes; some men's sleeping and under garments; and approximately a thousand dollars in currency.

The division of the spoil passed gaily what might have been a dark hour. Now they could understand the joy of an Eskimo squaw at the gift of a yard of cloth, or a butcher knife.

Roy called Horton aside to advise an immediate truce with Sandomar's gang. It would be hard to ignore and forget the shame in the dawn but policy demanded no less. Combined, they made a formidable party of thirteen men. They could dominate the timid Aleuts, possibly force them to break their taboo. Moreover, if the whites must make the journey alone, granted an almost impossible feat, the bloodstained hands would be needed to work the boat.

"And it soon may be a question of life and death," Roy said. "The food supplies on this island are decidedly limited. Eric thinks hard work and more efficient methods will feed the whole population, but I doubt it. We have no rifles, and we can't do much more with native gear than they themselves."

"You think we may have to ration the natives?" Horton asked.

"Possibly, for a few months. And we can't do it without Sandomar's support. I admit it's a bit raw—to come to their island and then half-starve them—but the fittest must survive. After all, they're just a handful of inbred savages, of not the slightest value to the world."

But could Sandomar's human wolves be controlled? It looked reasonable to Roy. Their pack probably lacked cohesion; three of them had no hand in the killings and would want peace. As for women, they could have their pick of the squaws—this would keep them satisfied—and Sandomar himself could take Fireheart, now that Eric had rejected her.

The grim-faced crew still hung back when Eric's crowd sought the comfort of the beach-fire. Only when the seal-meat was boiled, the birds sizzling, and the root-bread baked on the rocks, did they push sullenly near. Horton spoke to them casually and made room in the circle, but only "Garge," the little cockney, showed any sociability.

Nan would never forget this picture—the low red fire in the fading light, a fretful sea under blowing gray clouds, and the island populace gathered here in the truce of the bread and meat. It was hard to know whether she was sleeping in her own canopied bed in a glittering city and this was no more than a dream in the night, or whether she had died and was born again on this hopeless isle, and the distant lights, beauty, and warmth were no more than a vision in a white squaw's soul.

"Let's come to an understanding, all of us from the Intrepid," Horton began with every show of confidence. "We're in a bad predicament, to say the least, but it won't last long, and I think we should co-operate just as though we were still on the ship. And since I'll pay all the bills in the end, I think I may as well remain in charge."

He glanced toward Sandomar, but the deaf man's eyes were on the winking fingers of his cockney interpreter, and he did not glance up. The rest of the pack stood silent, in odd fixed postures.

"You must all stand and work together, and I'll lead you the best I can," Horton went on. "Now for tonight. Myself, my daughter and her maid, and Mrs. Horton will occupy one room of our two-room turf-house—Roy, Eric, Wilcox, and DeValera the other room. The Aleut couple who own the house have kindly agreed to move in with their neighbors. You other fellows seem to like one another's company, so suppose you take the large kashga (meeting house) at the end of the village row. Chechaquo tells me that he can furnish you with plenty of extra robes."

There was a tense silence, then Garge stepped forward. His little weasel face was drawn in an odd grimace, half-anger, half-scorn. "Who you speaking to—us?" he asked, in his high, rasping voice.

"Why, yes, I'm just suggesting—" "We don't need you to tell us where to sleep. We'll sleep where we please and with 'oo we please, and we don't want no lip from you. You 'ear me don't you?"

Horton changed color, but kept his head. Eric and his friends watched and waited in dead silence.

"I don't think you need take that tone," Horton replied. "There's no reason we should be enemies. We're all going out together, one of these days, and there'll be plenty of reward for good work and decent behavior."

GREAT BARRIER LURES SAVANTS

Vast Submarine Reef of Coral Off Australia.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

THE sea went dry along the east coast of Queensland, a thousand miles of coral "maze" would be revealed. The Great Barrier Reef of Australia must not be imagined as a continuous structure, like the Great Wall of China; it is formed by innumerable reefs, and a map of just one section resembles a complex jig-saw puzzle. Then there are the isles, mountainous and forested, of the inner zone, and the atolls and cays that are true coral islands.

For nearly a century the Great Barrier has intrigued science by the problems that it presents to geologists, physiographers and naturalists. It has lured such masters of marine zoology as Alexander Agassiz and A. G. Mayer from America, and recently a British expedition broke camp after a year on Captain Cook's first coral island.

In all the Seven Seas there is nothing so wonderful as this vast submarine "curtain" of coral, the largest coral reef in the world, whose nature and origin remain half veiled in mystery.

Tourists from many lands and thousands of Australians have made the voyage through "Australia's Grand Canal," the area between the mainland, with its purple hills, and the Outer Barrier. A calm and pleasant trip during a portion of the year, it may be perilous in the cyclone season.

Many launches and fishing craft have been wrecked among the coral, or gone down in the heart of a storm within the Barrier. But navigation is no longer the nightmare it was to the early voyagers, before the reef mazes had been mapped and routes safe for even large vessels discovered. Danger exists still, but the old fear has gone—the haunting fear of disaster in the Realm of Coral.

Surf Is Amazing Spectacle.

Majestic is the meeting of leagu-long rollers of the ocean and the Great Barrier. On days when the sunlit water behind the coral bastion is calm enough for a canoe, mountainous waves pound the reefs unceasingly. The surf on the Outer Barrier at high tide, when the broad reefs' crests are hidden, presents an amazing spectacle. A "long line of boiling surf, springing up in mid-ocean without any apparent cause," is the late Charles Hedley's description. That great naturalist, whose knowledge of the Barrier was unrivaled, devoted the last few years of his life to the study of its problems.

Swain Reefs, far south, mark the beginning of the Great Barrier Outer System. Farther north, the linear reefs are developed. They are some miles in length and up to half a mile across, with broad separating channels.

A lighthouse on Lady Elliot Islet marks the southern limit of coral-formed land, "a broad platform of solid coral half a mile in circumference." Then comes an archipelago, the Bunker group, followed by the Capricorn group, popular resort now of naturalists, and almost a picnic ground for holidaymakers from the mainland.

Within the Tropics, the maze is multiplied. From a hill at Cooktown you may see, as Captain Cook did in 1770, the shadows of the coral reefs wherever you look out to sea. The navigator who explored 2,000 miles of the east coast of Australia was ignorant of the existence of coral in those waters when his ship struck on Endeavour reef at night.

Had the weather been stormy she must have been lost, for coral fangs had pierced her hull. But calm sea enabled the sailors to patch up the bark by "fothering," and Cook sailed her to the beach for careening and repairs. Meanwhile, gazing from the hilltop, he discovered the coral.

With a seaworthy ship again, he won a way out of the maze, gaining open ocean through one of the great openings in the Barrier. He escaped many dangers only to meet with others a few days later.

The Endeavour, becalmed off the Outer Barrier, was borne toward the reef. She rose at last on a huge wave and seemed doomed to destruction, with only the breadth of a wave between her and the coral. But "a light air of wind sprung up," and the ship was saved.

Cook Claimed the Coast.

Captain Cook sought eagerly for an opening, and found his "Providential Channel." He was in the Grand canal once more, and with infinite care took the bark to Torres strait. Landing on an island which he named "Possession," he claimed the whole eastern coast of Australia for Britain, in the name of King George III. A memorial to Captain Cook has been erected on Possession island by the federal government, a simple obelisk bearing a tablet of bronze.

Blyth, commander of the Bounty, and his eighteen men who were faithful, made that memorable open-boat voyage from Tahitian waters to Restoration island, within the Great Barrier, in 1789. The mutineers' victims reached the reef at midnight, or rather came within sound of the surf, and two days later found a passage to safety. The boat voyage was continued along the east coast of Queensland and through Torres strait to Timor.

These old-time perilous voyages are discussed still in Australia. And round the campfire on a coral isle the talk may turn from Cook's discoveries and Blyth's amazing boat voyage to the recent loss of a launch, or the fate of a large steamer, sunk in a cyclone within a few miles of the mainland.

The Grand canal varies in width from 20 to 80 miles. There are two regions, however. The inner one is narrow and fairly free from the perils which make the outer zone impossible for shipping. Only small craft are navigated among the reefs of the outer zone.

Luggers are sailed along the channels, with coral fangs threatening destruction—sailed often where the reefs are uncharted, in the quest for sea slugs and pearl and trochus shell. Japanese own many of these venturesome craft.

Many Beautiful Islands.

The depth of the sea outside the Great Barrier is profound, but in the zone where coastal steamers go safely it varies from about ten fathoms to twenty; the outer zone is much deeper, up to seventy fathoms.

It is between these two zones that the mountainous islands lie, many of them beautiful and some the homes of happy people. Over hundreds of miles of sea they are strung, close together or with long gaps between.

Thousands of folk who make the winter tour to Queensland from southern ports say they have been to the Great Barrier reef, whereas they have merely sailed among the lofty islands, maybe without landing even on an atoll or a cay, the low coral isles beyond the high ones of granite. Only the few who go north venture to seek the actual Barrier, where that long lone of thundering surf rises in mid-ocean.

There is charm in the Grand canal trip, and life is pleasant on the favored islands, where a bungalow may nestle amid tropical fruit trees and palms, with a creek singing near on its little journey to the sea. Men have lived half a lifetime on a Barrier reef isle without desire to wander. It may be a lotus-eating life, or one of healthy work and play, as you please.

Rich men and poor men are lured to the region. Beach combers are rare now, yet here and there one meets with the cheerful loafer, who takes to a task only at the urge of sheer necessity.

Spain, though, played her part in pioneer navigation of Australasian seas. In 1605 three ships under Admiral de

The Great Barrier Reef.

Quilros sailed for the South Pacific from Callao. The captain of one was Luis Vaez de Torres, whose name lives forever as that of the strait between Australia and New Guinea. His vessel became separated from the other two, and Torres was probably the first European to sight Cape York peninsula, the northernmost point of Australia, and Prince of Wales Island.

But Torres' discovery was a secret from the world until 1762, when among the archives at Manila the record of his great voyage was found by the British. They gave honor where it was due, naming the strait after its discoverer.

Explored by Scientists.

Scientific investigation of the Great Barrier reef began when H. M. S. Fly cruised in the Coral sea and other waters. Her voyage extended over several years, 1842-1846, and J. Beete Jukes was the naturalist on board her, a geologist whose interests were not confined to rocks. Jukes wrote the first description of the Great Barrier, which remains one of the best general accounts we have of this geographical wonder.

"The Great Barrier reefs are thus found to form a long submarine buttress, or curtain, along the northeastern coast of Australia, rising in general precipitously from a very great depth, but resting towards the north on the shoaler ground of Torres strait, and towards the south on the bank stretching off from Sandy Cape. "If it were to be laid dry, this great Barrier would be found to have a considerable resemblance to a gigantic and irregular fortification, a steep glacis crowned with a broken parapet wall, and carried from one rising ground to another. The towerlike bastions, of projecting and detached reefs, would increase this resemblance."

Captain Cook's description of a coral reef, forgotten by all, perhaps, but renders of the great navigator's "Voyages," is worth quoting:

"A reef such as one speaks of here is scarcely known in Europe. It is a Wall of Coral Rock rising almost perpendicularly out of the unfathomable Ocean, always overflowed at high Water generally 7 or 8 feet, and dry in places at Low Water. The Large waves of the vast Ocean meeting with so sudden a resistance makes a most Terrible Surf breaking Mountains High . . ."

How I Broke Into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman

By WILL ROGERS

NOW about this movie business and how I got my start. To be honest about it, I haven't yet got a real good start. And the way I figure things, a fellow has to be a success before he goes lecturing and crowing about himself.

Out here in Hollywood, they say you're not a success unless you owe fifty thousand dollars to somebody, have five cars, can develop temperament without notice or reason at all, and been mixed up in four divorce cases and two breach-of-promise cases.

Well, as a success in Hollywood, I'm a rank failure, and I guess I'm too old to learn new tricks, and besides I'm pretty well off domestically speaking and ain't yearning for a change.

Now, about how I actually got started in this picture business. Mrs. Rex Beach was really the one who helped me get started, by selling the idea to Sam Goldwyn that he ought to star me in the movies. Mr. Goldwyn was connected with the Eminent Authors, Inc., of which Rex Beach was president. There were eight eminent authors in the outfit, maybe that's where they got the name, I guess.

Anyway, Sam signed me up, and I starred in a series of 6-reel comedy dramas for him during 1921 and 1922. The outstanding picture of this group was "Jubilo" based on the theme of the song of that name.

I also made "Doubling for Romeo" for this company. It was the story of a cowhand who went to sleep and dreamed he played Romeo in Shakespeare's immortal drama. I like my work in this one a lot, but they had a sales convention at the studio and showed the film to the gang. Although I thought the picture was very funny, the boys seemed to think different and refused to laugh. At the time I was nearly heartbroken, I felt that I was a flop and was about ready to quit pictures. Gosh, it was awful!

I wasn't writing much in those days, although since then the papers seem to like my stuff and pay me for making wise cracks, which doesn't make me a bit sore.

For recreation I used to keep some horses and goats on the lot back of the studio, and I spent most of my time enjoying the companionship of dumb but honest animals. They couldn't laugh at me. Which was encouraging!

From Goldwyn's I went to work for Hal Roach and made a series of 2-reel comedies there. It's a serious business—this making people laugh!

I remember when I was in the Follies. All I did was my rope act, and I didn't say nothing. But one evening the manager asked me to make an announcement, and foolishly I did, and everybody laughed at me or with me, and I was a success, and they've kept me talking or writing ever since. That's what comes of talking too much and trying to help some one out. Now I can't stop.

But wise cracks and picture work pay better than the rope-throwing act, and that saves my feelings a lot.

Sam Rork, who produced "A Texas Steer," in which I got the big comedy part of a congressman who was a Texas cowman, says he picked me out of all the Hollywood actors because all the rest of them have morality clauses in their contracts and are afraid to act like congressmen.

But I figured it out that it's because I was in the Follies. I'm an ex-Follies graduate, and if Barrymore had my legs, he could still be on the stage.

But I'd been in the movies before I signed up for "A Texas Steer." I've been in more punkin' seed movies, and most of the job was handling the rope. But that was a smart move, a comedy special they called it, with real actors helping me out, and all I had to do was act the big comedy part of being a congressman. That's a cinch. Any day in the week any congressman I've known can give me a big laugh acting natural.

My advice to aspiring movie-struck folk is to buy a good 12-foot rope, practice with it, and then if you don't succeed, why, you can always stretch it over a nearby tree with one end around your neck.

election. That's the apparently authentic report in well informed circles.

"Charley" Boots, owner of Elmwood Stock Farm at Milpitas, Santa Clara county, has devoted his entire life to the breeding and racing of thoroughbred horses, and is ideally fitted by temperament, education and experience to become a member of the racing board.

The pioneer horseman is known in all sections of the state as a crusader for high class racing. In fact, it is no secret that the popular sportsman "killed" the sport in the old days simply because he felt the pastime was not conducted for the improvement of the breed of the thoroughbred and for the protection, as well as the joy, of the fans.

Hardly had the racing game passed out of the colorful life of the West for the time being when Boots began a movement for its restoration, but on another plane, that of sport for sport's sake, as the old saying goes. Fruition of his plans came with the organization of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club ten years ago, and the construction of modern Tanforan.

Friends of the late Adolph B. Spreckels and of his brother Rudolph Spreckels, both life long admirers and breeders and campaigners of thoroughbreds, give full credit to "Charley" Boots for cementing a breach in the personal relations of the brothers that had continued for a protracted period. He appealed to the brothers on the score of sport and won out. With several others, the brothers Spreckels put up the capital for building the grandstand, clubhouse, barns and the race course itself at Tanforan. It was all done in the name of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club and two meetings were held on the betless plan.

The people craved the opportunity of having a few dollars on their favorite gallopers, and that opportunity came with the turning over of the Tanforan plant by the Pacific Coast Jockey Club to the Pacific Coast Breeders Association, in which latter organization John W. Marchbank, owner of the picturesque nursery Heather Farm, has done the piloting. Boots and other loyal supporters of racing have worked with Marchbank to bring the pastime in California to its present enviable position.

"Charley" Boots, as the story goes among turf followers, has brought back racing by his untiring efforts in the long years when no bugle was heard summoning the first field to the post, and especially by his unselfish endeavors to achieve victory for Number Three on the June 27 ballot. Only for his winning over the support of influential men and organizations formerly opposed to racing it is said by enthusiasts of the game that the mutual lay could not have been put over. He left no stone unturned for the triumph destined to cap the well directed efforts of a life time.

William Boots, father of the man accorded the credit for the restoration of the sport, founded Elmwood Farm at Milpitas in the fifties. In the blood of runners bred at Elmwood, famous on tracks East and West, coursed blood of Henry Williamson's Belmont, the first thoroughbred to cross the plains to California. From that beginning, long ago, "Charley" Boots, with sacrifice of personal fortune, kept the tradition of thoroughbred breeding alive.

From Elmwood have come hundreds of winners, with the Senator Leland Stanford bred Brutus having more than a little to do with the success. There is a yarn to the effect that Senator Stanford did not like the looks of Brutus's hocks and sold the stallion on account of that supposed defect. The mistaken judgment on the part of the Senator resulted in golden opportunity for Boots in the employment in breeding of the son of Macgregor, a noted English stakes winner, of which he took full advantage.

Few horsemen in any part of the world could boast—not that "Charley" Boots is of the boasting kind—of a record of having bred, owned, trained and raced horses in one year that won ninety-nine events on the big courses of the country. Some would have it that the winning performances mounted up to an even hundred, but with his usual care in hewing strictly to the truth, "Charley" will not stretch the number.

The well known breeder has his "pets" among the great ones from Elmwood and probably likes to "fan" about Peter the Great, of the time of Domino, and of the four mile record breaking Lucrezia Borgia more than any of the others.

Boots is fully qualified to battle with the almost countless technical problems that will confront the Racing Board, and on account of his equally valuable asset of the broadest off views as to racing, his services are absolutely necessary in the partially uncharted field the Racing Board is to traverse. His presence on the turf governing body of California must be insisted upon, whatever the dictates of his modest nature may be.

TANFORAN MEET ENDS TOMORROW

The Summer meeting of the San Mateo County Jockey Club will come to a close at Tanforan tomorrow (Saturday), featured by the Farewell Handicap, with an attractive purse for three-year-olds and upward. If entries warrant, the club will extend tomorrow's program to eleven events. Preparations are being made for a great crowd to witness the meeting's close at San Bruno.

This week the track operated Monday and Tuesday, rested Wednesday and Thursday, and resumed today (Friday). The week-end holiday brought one of the largest crowds of the summer meeting at the track.

With the close of this meeting Tanforan will pass from the hands of John W. Marchbank, noted California sportsman, who re-opened it several years ago, and guided racing in California back to public favor by efficient and well-conducted meetings. The passing of Marchbank's control, however, will not lessen his interest in the sport, or in the breeding of thoroughbreds, both of which have won him a high place in turfdom.

Mr. Marchbank has turned operation of Tanforan over to the California Blood Horse Association, made up of fifty sportsmen from various parts of the state. He will devote his entire time to breeding and racing fine horses, and will have nothing further to do with the operation of the track. The noted sportsman said he considered his work done when the electorate voted to restore racing under the pari-mutuel system of wagering.

The new association, the membership of which will not exceed fifty at any time, will sponsor the breeding industry and the matching of its product on the track. Members have announced this as their principal aim. Nearly all of them are now engaged in the breeding of thoroughbreds, while the others plan to open stables in the near future.

RENOVIZE CAMPAIGN ATTRACTS ATTENTION

The Renovize San Mateo county campaign is expected to be definitely launched the latter part of July, or the first of August, according to a statement released by the Renovize committee.

This Renovize campaign will have as its object the securing of pledges from property owners throughout the county that they will expend at least one million dollars in doing necessary and needed improvements in their property within the next six months.

This campaign will be widely publicized, with every medium and avenue of advertising to be used—radio broadcasting, newspaper publicity, and advertising in many other forms will be used to acquaint the public and property owner with the objects of this huge civic enterprise.

It is expected that more than 500 citizens throughout the county will volunteer their services in calling upon the property owners to secure their pledges.

Former Governor C. C. Young heads the executive committee of this Renovize movement, and has serving with him on this executive board, business, civic and professional leaders of the county.

County-wide endorsement and approval of this Renovize campaign has already been given by many organizations, together with many citizens who have already offered their services in this civic campaign.

United Veterans Plan To Aid Their Comrades

The United Veterans' Council of San Mateo county is at present conducting a survey to ascertain how many veterans in this county will be reduced to a state of need by loss of federal compensation under the national economy act, which became effective July 1. An effort is being made through all ex-service men's organizations of the county to reach every veteran, who through loss of compensation, will be required to seek county aid to maintain himself or his family.

A questionnaire has been printed by the council, and is being distributed by all veterans' organizations, and through the Unemployment Relief headquarters in San Mateo. These questionnaires must be filled out by the veteran requiring aid from the county, and must be returned to the council by July 20.

More than 14,000 banks have reopened since the national bank holiday came to an end in March.

BANK OF AMERICA TO HAVE BANK IN LOOMIS

Adequate banking service for Loomis was assured a few days ago when Will F. Morrish, president of the Bank of America, announced that the branch bank's management has approved the petition of prominent townsmen and will establish a branch there in the near future.

The way was cleared for early installation of the Loomis branch when court action sanctioned the sale of the Loomis property of the closed California Trust & Savings Bank to the Bank of America. The negotiations for the sale were conducted by A. Q. Robison, special deputy superintendent of banks, who announced that the deal was arranged on terms most favorable to depositors of the closed institution.

Commenting upon the decision of the Bank of America to establish a branch there, Mr. Morrish said, "This action is in line with the policy of the Bank of America to provide banking service to every California community where conditions warrant. The residents of Loomis have evidenced a strong desire to have our institution represented in their community, and we are happy to accede to their request."

VOLUME 5 FRIDAY, JULY 7, 1933 NUMBER 50

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, offered a cherry in the middle of the morning, looked at it cynically. "And why," he enquired, "should I start up this highly complicated machinery of digestion, just for a single cherry?"

"The thing for you to do," said the doctor to the man with the frazzled nerves, "is to stop thinking about yourself—to bury yourself in your work."

"Gosh!" exclaimed the patient, "and me a concrete mixer."

The little school-boy was saying his prayers before going to bed, and his mother—who was listening in—heard him say:

"And please, God, make Boston the capital of Vermont."

"Why, Bobby," said the mother, "why on earth did you ask that?"

"Because," said Bobby, "I made it that way today in my examination paper, and I want it to be right."

"Er—I am seeking your daughter's hand—er—have you any objection, sir?"

Father: "None at all. Take the one that's always in my pocket."

A customer sent the following note to his grocer:

"Please send six dozen eggs; if good, I'll send check."

The grocer, however, was not doing business on any such risky terms, so he replied:

"Send check; if good, I will send six dozen eggs."
